

Committed to ecological transformation, Veolia's employees are at the heart of its new worldwide advertising campaign

Veolia is reaffirming its ambition for ecological transformation with a new campaign that pays tribute to its 220,000 employees – its Resourcers – working on the ground to turn the tide

Released to mark World Environment Day, this new campaign emphasizes the involvement of an optimistic collective, together determined to meet environmental challenges of today and of tomorrow. It opens with a flagship advertising film, The River, that celebrates the volunteer mindset of Veolia's employees, an unstoppable collective that wants to see the world as it could be and strives each day to make it happen.

The campaign is enhanced with portraits of Fatima in France, Marta in Spain and Viktor in Germany, who talk about their careers and determination to succeed with ecological transformation together. Over the next few months, these will be complemented by a dozen other stories, which will be available in the press, on social networks and veolia.com where everyone will be able to learn more about what Resourcers are doing on the ground.

"This campaign is a message of optimism, showing that solutions for ecological transformation are out there and are coming to life thanks to the women and men all around the world working every day to turn the tide", explains Laurent Obadia, Senior Executive Vice President, Stakeholders and Communications. "Our employees' testimonies reflect the collective engagement driving our ambition to become the global champion of ecological transformation. It also has special meaning following our historic combination with Suez, which has allowed us to enrich our team with more new talents Today, we are already 220,000 , more than ever optimistic, determined and side by side to face the biggest challenges of our century".
